Mechanical madness?

The meat machine . . .

The director of the South Dakota Department of Agriculture announced recently that research is underway to create vending machines that would distribute raw beef, according to UPI.

Robert Woldt said the plan is to market raw South Dakota beef through vending machines in major metropolitan areas. He revealed the plan in a speech to the South Dakota livestock convention in Sioux

'You would press a button and out would come the meat, just like you get a pack of cigarettes," Woldt

The machines, he said, would be set up near big office buildings and factories and would accept cash or credit cards.

He said the plan would not eliminate the middleman but would reduce the price of meat by cutting marketing costs. That would mean more money for producers and lower prices for consumers, Woldt said.

The beef-vending machines probably would feature six or seven beef items, such as steaks and hamburger patties, he said.

Woldt said a Midwest vending company already had expressed an interest in the proposal and was studying the market in the Gary, Ind., and Buchanan,

It has been projected that more than 100 billion gallons of water will be needed, and the Air Force is checking out other water sources, such as aquifer systems and going as deep as 2500 feet.

The cattle and sheep industries might again feel the MX pinch, as the MX would bring about herd size reductions by reducing AUMs (Animal Unit Month), which is the amount of feed or forage required by one mature cow with calf or equivalent for one month. Operators generally have only enough private range and hayland to meet the forage requirements of current herd sizes. according to the Nevada Cattlemen's Assn. They generally do not have unused AUM' available from private sources. Thus. any cutbacks in grazing lands on BLM would mean a cutback in herd size. Herds

BY MEASURING

A revolutionary new method of evaluating and selecting cattle through dimensional measurements is making news throughout the industry. Itis based on research carried out by Dr. Jan Bonsma, the renown South African animal scientist, and cattlemen in this country. The measurement system works and is going to change the cattle industry as we know it.

Genetic Profiles has developed this advanced method for cattlemen to measure and accurately evaluate their cattle through computer and video technology. Because of the tremendous interest in the "measuring" method, the people at Genetic Profiles are offering a series of Measure ment Seminars throughout the United States to acquaint cattlemen with this unique evaluation tool For information on how to register for a Seminar in your area, please write

Meat import won't affect meat market

Carter's recent move to suspend meat import quotas for 1981, CNS reports say. Under the countercyclical meat import law, the president has the power to suspend these import levels if he feels the consumer will be paying too much for meat. Industry sources say this move could put psychological pressure on futures prices and conjure up visions of massive amounts of meat coming across the porder and competing with the domestic product.

In reality, they say, projected imports won't be much over the suspended quota because of current world supply and demand situation. World demand for meat is high and is amplified by the fact some major meat-exporting countries, such as Australia, had a bad production year. Thus, the impact on meat prices based on real supply-based figures should be minimal, the sources say.

This annual Sitz Angus Ranch bull sale was what the industry has come to expect of the firm. was an aggressive sale from the very opening. The buils were better than ever, and they sold lust about in that pattern.

Actually the average price per bull was down just a little from the previous sale, but the sale struck just a little different style than some. The very top buils did not return quite as many dollars, however the somewhat lesser kind of bulls returned more dollars. Bob Sitz was working with more bulls at weaning time and he was able to make the bulls

The 1980 Landers sale was down some in average price from the same date one year ago: however, this was still a strong sale when compared to many in the general trade area.

These Landers bulls carry sent a great attraction to the commercial rancher people; and this group of people once again peeled the very top buils out at consistently strong prices. Ranchers do not arque about the price on the biggest and best kind, and that was true here today. The bulls in the $2000 to sell to this crowd. The bulls must be big, have good records, and of that kind.
